XIAOCIDIAN - MY FIRST IPHONE APP - DEMO AND THOUGHTS

Category: Chinese, Mac, iPhone

Here is a demo of my first native iPhone application. It is feature complete and in the process of getting submitted to the AppStore (I have to finish doing all the paper work. I happen to have a natural aversion to paper work).

I've also had a few people ask me about the process. From programming in Xcode / Cocoa / Objective-C, to getting approved by Apple to submit the app, and the actual application submission process, to what's a ball park figure for how long it takes to write one. Hopefully these will shed some light...

The first movie is the actual application. Which, by the way, is a Chinese / English dictionary that lets you search by Mandarin pinyin, English, or Simplified characters (also, 典 should have been third tone sorry :-/):

Google Talk Translation Bots

Google announced they introduced a couple of translation bots to their chat software Google Talk. For instance, invite en2zh@bot.talk.google.com, open a chat with it, and then whenever you type something in English, the bot will repeat the same in Chinese (say e.g. "hello" and the bot correctly translates to "你好"). This feature might come in handy in group chat when you talk to someone with another native language.

Besides en2zh, the other supported language pairs are, according to Google: ar2en, bg2en, de2en, de2fr, el2en, en2ar, en2de, en2el, en2es, en2fr, en2it, en2ja, en2ko, en2nl, en2ru, es2en, fi2en, fr2de, fr2en, hi2en, hr2en, it2en, ja2en, ko2en, nl2en, ru2en, uk2en, ur2en, zh2en. Always append @bot.talk.google.com to get the bot address.
